Rabwah in pictures, from human rights perspective

A bird’s-eye view of Rabwah, the Ahmadiyya headquarters town. Its name was changed, and changed once more, to CHENAB NAGAR against the wishes of its residents.

Graffiti on the wall of the Muslim Colony mosque, at Rabwah. It means: “Wholesome security of Islam and the faith lies in total liquidation of Ahmadis.”

Police Station Rabwah (Chenab Nagar) where a criminal case is registered under Ahmadiyya-specific law, against the entire population of Rabwah.

Mirza Ghulam Qadir Ahmad
The computer scientist was murdered by Ahmadi-bashers at Rabwah/Chiniot bridge on 14 April 1999. He was 37. He left behind a widow and four children.
Ahmadi pressmen from Rabwah behind bars: editor, publisher, printer & staff.

The Town Hall of Rabwah. No Ahmadi can become a councilor here even though 95% of Rabwah's population is Ahmadi.

Al-Rashid Trust office and dispensary at Rabwah: The Trust is officially banned for its support to terrorism, however it is permitted to function openly at Ahmadi headquarters town, Rabwah.

Railway station Rabwah: it now displays the town's name as Chenab Nagar imposed by the government against the wishes of the residents.

Graffiti on wall declares: 'Death to the mischief of Qadianiyyat'. Islami Jamiat Talaba, Rabwah (an extremist students organization involved in anti-Ahmadiyya activities at campuses.)

A provocative procession organized by mullahs passes through the main bazaar of Rabwah, shouting slogans.

Ahmadiyya mosque at Ahmad Nagar, Rabwah: sealed by authorities for no apparent reason except to placate a mullah.
Ahmadiyya high school at Rabwah taken over by the state, and not returned despite change in policy concerning nationalized schools.
